PROGRAM INFORMATION

You are required to select an emphasis from the following: Environmental, International, Quantitative, Pre-Law and Southwest. See the Catalog and consult your Economics Advisor in your emphasis selection.

You may use individualized coursework in ECO 497 Independent Study toward your Extended Economics Degree, with prior written approval from your Economics faculty advisor.

Be aware that some courses required for the degree require pre- requisites (courses that must be taken first). Consult with your academic advisor in choosing Liberal Studies courses as you may choose to take pre-requisites as Liberal Studies.
The Extended Bachelor of Science in Economics is based upon social science courses, including political science, geography, history, and sociology. Major courses in economics may include Intermediate Macro and Micro Economic Theory, Comparative Economic Systems, Economic Thought, Forecasting, Economic Development of the Reservations, and others. Career preparation for employment in both public and private sectors with an orientation in broad economic issues that span both sectors of the economy.
This degree is a hybrid degree in the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences that is advised through the College of Business Administration and requires the student to register with the College of Business Administration. Your Economics faculty advisor will be assigned by the Office of Academic Services in the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences.
